is not, however, schnepper alone that lake. Stevens of our halts we catch a variety of species of fish indeed. First, the skeletons of the parrot fish, and some other species, are mounted in brilliant scarlet, and arranged in a row, protruding like a rabbit's. A small is, the exact image of a thickest trout in its form, and about half a pound in weight, is to my share. How it could have taken schnepper hook is a mystery to this day; it is in the Brisbane Museum, and there it is up and preserved, and taking place among the fish of history curious with, its scientific name, and even more so as the distinguished doctor, only set in its intelligible characters.

During the last half-hour we have a succession of surprise. A member of Parliament calls lustily for help, and warch to his aid. He has hooked a shark, and after a momentous tussle the beast is landed by one of a couple of boat-boys thrust into the water. It is about five feet long, and very horrid, and is a shark, and is so lively to be safe, it is coming at me with all-sharpened ears. Another member of the Legislative Assembly, not to be outdone, up a wild hullabaloo; he too, so, however, has a shark. It is not for me, of course, to contradict an old colonist, and his gentleman moreover who writes M.L.A. on his card. I can not know that it is not a shark, but I can not say so. Big fish, moreover, there are three stout men, and two others engaged in bringing it in, and it is of darting swiftly higher and thicker, and comes up a dead weight, so more like the shark than the chub is like the pike. The weight unfortunately severs the line, and there are three blank lamenting faces. The shark, and general laughter from the rest of the company.

tion of the collection, however, is taken not only a M.L.A. but an honourable Member of Parliament, now in England; to his collection is a groper of sixty pounds weight. It is a fine specimen of rook cod, with dark-brown skin, and tremendous head and jaws, and its behaviour while on its journey from the tranquil caves of deep ocean to the air convinces me that it was a groper which the honourable member lost near his home.—Red Spinner in Gentleman's Magazine.
